The Water Supply.

To the Editor of The Evening Critic:

The letter of the Water Registrar to a citizen who complains of the insufficient supply of water published in THE CRITIC of yesterday, is simply a dreary repetition of the same dreary old tune which has been ground ont over and over again for so many years.

The supply of water in this District is greater in quantity than is brought into any city of the world. The reason why it is so badly distributed is owing solely to the incompetent manner in which this emormous supply has been managed. Taking the number of water-takers at 20,000, the actual supply to private consumers being 20,000,000 of gallons per diem, the average amount supplied to each house is 1,000 gailons per diem to each person using Potomac water. The claim that the United States uses of twelve or thirten millions of gallons per diem has been so often exploded that its repetition has become an impertinence. If every tapused by the departments, &c., were to be kept running day and night they could not draw over 7,000,000 gallons per diem, but as the use of these taps cannot average more than twelve hours out of the twenty-four the greatest use in the Departments is less than 4,000,000 gallons per diem, but saft the suspention. If the supply were properly distributed, and the proper methods taken to prevent waste in private houses, &c., the present supply would be superabundant in every part of the city, and the stand-pipe absurdity be dispensed with in toto. The stand-pipe is a standing monument of the genius for blundering which afflicts us.

No one is going to say that the oligarchy which runs the District machine is not the best government on the face of the earth, but if Hoxle is going to stand on his stand-runs and Cros it was and on his tend. The surface and the continue of the city and the stand-runs and Cros it was and on his tend. The surface and in the stand-runs and Cros it was a surface and the continuent of the city and the stand-runs and challed the continuent of the city and th ought to.

No one is going to say that the oligarchy which runs the District machine is not the best government on the face of the earth, but if Hoxie is going to stand on his standpipe and Cox is to stand on his facts, they would not get votes enough to elect either of them to engineer a peanut stand.

There is a prospect of this place having water-works in the near future. The Diamond Drill Company, of Pennsylvania, will "bore for water" on the Waterman place, west of town, soon. If there is anything in a name they ought to strike water.

John Paul, Congressman-elect, is now stumping the county for Cameron. You can see on all sides the letters "C. C. C.," which, interpreted, is "Cameron Campaign Club."

In language burning hot,
"Matilda, do you lovo me, dear?"
Says she, "I love you Knott."

"Oh, say not so!" again he cried,
"Oh, share with me my lot!
Oh, say that you will be my bride!"
Says she, "I'll wed you, Knott."

"Ob, cruel fair, to serve me so! I love you well, you wot." "I could not wed you, Reub," says she, "For then I should be Knott."

A light breaks in on Reuben's mind, And in his arms she got; She looks demurely in his face, And says, "Pray kiss me, Knott."

Professional Trusts.

St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

When the eminent surgeon, Dr. Agnew, left the distinguished White House patient to go over to Philadelphia to look after an impecunious sailor with a fractured skull, the country probably thought he was guilty of buncombe. But he only showed his appreciation of his great and sacred trust as a healer of mankind. He had been entrusted with a human life, and professionally and morally his obligation to the poor and helpless sailor was as great as his obligation to the President of the United States. It is this sort of devotion that makes the physician the noblest of the professionals. In one of Charles Lever's stories a designing woman, being called upon to explain one of her peculiar sacrifices, says: "If you were to call at the residence of a Hanover Square physician at night and tell him that if he would go to the northeast corner of Regent's Park he would northeast corner of Regent's Park he would find a guinea under a stone he would slam find a guinea under a stone he would slam the door in your face and curse you for your impertinence; but if you should awake the same independent man out of his bed and tell him that a poor man was suffering with colic in Chelsea he would rush to his side;
feel his pulse, pocket a fee of a guinea and go home satisfied." What au illustration of the sense of duty that must actuate men of all professions! The advocate, no less than the physician, must feel the same obligation resting upon him. When a lawyer undertakes to defend a criminal on trial for his life, he owes him as much skill and service as though he were a physician and service as though he were a physician fighting off his diseases. He accepts the same sacred trust.

At a colored camp-meeting at Creedmore Park, near Philadelphia, last Sunday, the singers clapped one another on the back and sang their loudest:

"Come up byer and git on de kyers!" yelled the old man in a voice like a foghorn, but no one came. The excitement of the meeting culminated in the announcement that the dollar had been raised and a
